“ He loved Massachusetts, Japan, the Red Sox, playing board games, traveling, Sumo wrestling, music and teaching English. He loved helping and supporting others. We traveled many beautiful places together. We laughed so hard, we cried, we argued. Every single moment is my treasure.

One of my funny moments was when I woke him up, I saw full of water in the inner corners of his eyes. I said “why are you crying?” And he said “huh? No! I am sweating!” It never happens to my Japanese eyes. So I was surprised that he could hold his sweat in his deep set eyes. That was funny and sometimes we were chatting about it and laughed. I loved his beautiful deep set eyes.

One of my sweet memories of him was when we were on the way back home, he suddenly stopped his car, I said “what? What happened?” He got out of the car and grabbed a dozen of water bottles and gave a homeless woman those bottles of water. Such a sweet man.

He took me to his son’s place, company, his family’s and relatives’ and friends’ places. So I could meet wonderful people through him. I was very happy and lucky to have such a handsome and kind and sweet man.

I hope he is dancing with grandpa Johnson in heaven now. He loved the way of grandpa Johnson’s dance. I do love, too.

Love,
Satomi
